Forecast For Yorkshire & the Humber
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Wednesday 20 Jan 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Rather mild and wet but turning colder later.

Today:
A rather mild start to the day with outbreaks of rain and drizzle. Rain will be heavy and persistent at times, especially over higher ground. Turning colder across the north of the region through the afternoon. Maximum temperature 11 deg C (52 deg F).

Tonight:
Becoming colder for all overnight with periods of heavy rain continuing, with the risk of sleet and hill snow through the early hours. Windy by the end of the night. Minimum temperature 1 deg C (34 deg F).

Thursday:
Outbreaks of rain, sleet and hill snow gradually clearing through Thursday morning. Thereafter, sunny spells and scattered wintry showers. Very windy and bitterly cold with gales over hills and coasts. Maximum temperature 5 deg C (41 deg F).

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:
Cold and windy on Friday with sunshine and scattered wintry showers. Less windy over the weekend with some sunshine and a few wintry showers. Widespread frost overnight.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.